Washington Post Service WASHINGTON — A.W. Noting that Mr. Reagan had described the IMF as "the linchpin of the system," Mr. de Larosière called for action — mainly, passage of the $8.4-billion IMF appropriation held up in Congress.

"The task now is to translate this determination into the actions needed to increase the financial resources available to the fund,"

German Socialists' Split On Missile Issue Grows

By Henry Tanner

International Herald Tribune BERLIN - The leaders of West Germany's Social Democrats, who are still deeply split on the project-ed deployment of new American nuclear missiles, are rapidly losing control of their party's rank and file over the issue. Regional party assemblies in four federal states and West Berlin have come out with flat or conditional rejections of the NATO decision to deploy the weapons at the end of this year if U.S. Soviet negonations in Geneva fail. In some cases, Socialist members of the national parliament who had taken moderate positions in the capital reversed their stand in the local assemblies and under grassroots pressure came out for militant reiection of nuclear rearmament.

There have been press reports that in some assemblies, notably Hamburg, a strong emotional link was created for the first time between opposition to the missiles and the sharpening national con-flict over social issues and especially over unemployment in the shipyards and other heavy industries.

In the past it had been said that workers and union members were much less worned about the nuclear issue than students and other young people. This may now be changing as leading union members were in the forefront of the nuclear opposition in some of the

The most telling case was the action of the local party in Hamburg, home of former Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, who had been one of the authors and chief advocates of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's "dual track" deciwith the Russians but also set 1983 as the deadline for deployment of the new missiles if negotiations

Mr. Schmidt has kept defending his policy in heated debates at the top party gatherings in Bonn but is reported to have become increasingly isolated. In Hamburg, the resolution in favor of immediate outright rejection of deployment was submitted to the party by delegates from the district of Berge-dorf, Mr. Schmidt's own electoral

Despite the economic recovery that seems to be under way in industrial nations, the global debt problem "has not yet been re-solved," Mr. de Larosière said. He called on Third World borrowing countries to continue efforts to control inflation and reiterated the need for commercial banks to re-

During the meeting, it was re-vealed that the IMF — which has suspended new major loans be-cause it is running out of resources needs to borrow not just $6 billion as a "bridging loan" to cover excess commitments already made, but an additional $7 billion to cover the two-year period 1983-84. This $13-billion total may be expanded further to cover the total needed from 1983 to 1985.

Mr. de Larosière said that "we will have to resort to some form" of additional borrowing in 1984. Next ar will not necessarily be similar to this year, he said. "It depends on those who get to borrow, and on the total amount that's needed," he

Officials said the IMF would look to the United States, which has not agreed to participate in this year's bridging loan, to participate in next year's package, although it is recognized that the administra tion will have considerable difficul-

Asked if he would settle for a compromise of $12 billion to $13 billion, as proposed by several European nations, Mr. Clausen said:

BOGOTA — Talks here between representatives of the Salvadoran government and leftist rebels have reached a crisis stage and will not continue unless the left changes its position, according to the head of the government peace commission, Francisco Oumonez.

He made his comments after a three-and-a-half-hour meeting of the two sides here Thursday. At the meeting, the leftists rejected the government's proposal that they participate in elections tenta-

KARACHI, Pakistan - President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq, starting his seventh year as Pakistan's military ruler, is facing his toughest political test in a seven-week-old campaign of civil disobedience and violent demonstrations that has led to dozens of deaths and thousands of arrests.

The protests have centered on semi-feudal Sind province around the port city of Karachi, a traditional bastion of opposition to most Pakistani governments since the country achieved indepenlence from British rule in 1947.

In a clash Thursday in Sind, 17 protesters and one policeman were killed, the government said. Andrés Zaldivar, one of the opposition leaders who have returned to Chile from exile, being welcomed in Santiago.

Returning Exiles Internationalize Chile

SANTIAGO --- When General Augusto Pinochet rose to power here a decade ago, Gonzalo (Payo) Grondona was a leftist folk singer. Rose Marie Graepp was a radio journalist. Ariel Dorfman was a respected writer. And Andrés Zaldivar was a leading politician.

By Jackson Diehl

All of them were prominent members of the intellectual and political elite of this country. And although they had little in common, all were destined to spend the better part of a decade abroad. They were among Chile's tens of thousands of political exiles, severed from contact or influence in a society that General Pinochet hoped to transform.

Now all four are back in Santiago. They have come from East Germany, Mexico, the United States and Spain. Mr. Zaldivar has brought new ideology, Mr. Dorfman new books, Miss Graepp oew reporting theory and Mr. Gron-dona "a crateful of new songs." In the turnult of Chile's political crisis, the thousands of political ex-

Since 1973, at least 10,000 people in virtually every social, political and cultural sector have been forcibly transplanted to more than 50 countries. Some esti-mates of the oumber of exiles, including those who were not formally expelled, range up to 200,000 in a country of 11.5 million.

Now, as that elite slowly filters back, a new overlay of leadership colored by a decade of personal privation and international experience is mixing into professions and political parties long circumscribed by military tutelage.

As part of a conciliatory policy meant to defuse a mass protest movement, authorities have authorized the entry of nearly 2,500 exiles since June and have pledged to consider allowing the rest to return, excluding only a short list of political terrorists.

And yet, the promised action has been paralyzed in recent weeks as governmental factions debate the effects of allowing so many potential opponents to return, according to well-informed sources.

It is not only in politics, however, that returning exiles have had to come to terms with new movements built while they were abroad. In journalism, said Miss Graepp, "the problem now is not the closing of the gap between exiles and those here, but freedom of expression. Until there is more liberty here, those coming back cannot even apply their new experience."

For Mr. Doriman, the danger of the influx of exiles is that many activists may not find a place, and with the bitterness of the past, will only increase Chile's polarization.

Some elements of the boycott remained in effect, principally the pilots' action that caused British Airways and Finnair to announce a 60-day suspension of flights that, if sustained, would expire in November. Soviet Union, saying they were "not constrained by our ethics."

Mrs. Thatcher, speaking at the British Embassy, called on the West to deal with Soviet leaders with a clear recognition of what she said was their lack of morality. "We are confronted by a power of great military strength, which has consistently used force against its neighbors, which wields the threat of force as a weapon of policy and which is bent on subverting and destroying the confidence and stability of the Western

She added: "Some may recoil at the thought of negotiating with men whose theories and actions have been responsible for so much suffering. Yet the character of modern weapons, not only nuclear but conventional, obliges us to do so. So we must persist in our efforts, but resolve to do nothing that would hand an advantage to the other side."

U.S. Would Limit Chemical Exposure

WASHINGTON (Combined Dispatches) — The Occupational Safety and Health Administration has called for a drastic lowering of the level at which workers may be exposed to ethylene dibromide, a chemical widely used in refining gasoline and as a furnigant for citrus and tropical fruit. The agency proposed Thursday a reduction from the current allowable level of 20 parts per million to 0.1 parts per million averaged over an eight-hour day, and asserted that the standards would substantially reduce the "excess risk" of cancer among the estimated 56,000 workers who are exposed to the chemical. Ethylene dibrounide has been linked to cancer and reproductive damage.

On Friday, the Environmental Protection Agency imposed an emergency ban on the use of the chemical as a soil furnigant for crops. The agency cited evidence that the chemical "is contaminating ground water supplies in a number of states."

Cuba Seizes Dissident Despite Pledge PARIS (NYT) - Cuba has arrested Ricardo Bofill, the former vice rector of the University of Havana, after promising France that the anti-Castro dissident would be left alone and allowed to leave the country. The arrest on Saturday of Mr. Bofill, who is not known to be related to the Spanish architect of the same name, has caused considerable imitation and some embarrassment to France's Socialist government, which has sought to maintain good relations with Cuba.

According to his wife, Mr. Bofill went to the French Embassy on April 29 because he had been threatened by telephone and his mail had been intercepted. Once he was there, she said, the embassy was surrounded by security policemen and her husband left the building after the French ambassador was given assurances about his freedom.

Manila Police Break Up New Protest Against Marcos in Financial District

By William Chapman

MANILA - Police used tear gas and water hoses Friday to break up a large crowd gathered in the financial district, the locale of several recent demonstrations against the government of President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

Fire trucks sprayed water on a crowd that had refused to disperse after a peaceful and generally quiet protest against Mr. Marcos.

Some in the crowds and in business offices lining the streets threw bottles and other objects, and the plainciothesmen retaliated by hurling canisters of tear gas.

Hours after the midafternoon encounter, police remained in the streets, with traffic blocked off and thousands of workers fearful of leaving their offices. Makati, the commercial and fi-

JERUSALEM - The negotia-

The negotiations, which had nev-er been given much chance of succeeding, failed to bridge the wide gap separating Mr. Shamir's gov-erning Likud bloc and the opposition Labor alignment on such key issues as the future of the West Bank, Jewish settlement in the occupied territory and the Israeli military presence in Lebanon. Following a meeting Friday morning with the Labor leader, Shimon Peres, Mr. Shamir said it was "almost impossible to find a compromise formula that will satisfy both parties." Mr. Shamir said the Likud oegotiators had rejected a Labor Party demand that the next government agree to the principle of "territorial compromise," a Labor formula to return some of the West Bank to

"We are not ready to join a government that will continue settlements in all parts of the West Bank and Gaza Strip," he said.

Recent public opinion polls have shown overwhelming support for a national unity government, which has become something of a "motherhood" issue in a country that has grown weary of the constant bickring between the Likud bloc and the opposition.

The negotiations lasted a week. They often seemed to be centered on maneuvering over who would bear the most public blame for the failure of the talks.

Mr. Shamir has already reached an agreement on a oew Likud coalition made up of the other political parties that form the current government. On the basis of that agreement, President Chaim Herzog asked Mr. Shamir last month to form the next Israeli government.

However, at the request of some members of the coalition, Mr. Shamir agreed first to explore the possibility of a government of national unity with the Labor alignment.

It is now taken for granted that the Social Democrats at their party congress in November will refuse to reaffirm the NATO position and will ask instead for an extension of the Geneva negotiations and a cor-responding delay of the missile deployment.

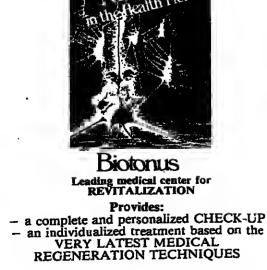

Willy Brandt, like Mr. Schmidt a former chancellor, has come out for postponement of the deployment and even told a party meeting in Bonn that he had supported Mr. Schmidt's original policy with great personal misgivings at the time only because be felt it was his duty to stand behind the chancellor.

The Socialist leaders fear, however, that a brusque departure from the pro-missile position they held when they were in the government would be interpreted in West Germany and abroad as a sign that the accused by some of the West Ger-party is moving away from the man press of being indecisive and Western alliance and ignoring its lacking leadership and thus setting

WASHINGTON - The army has announced that it will cancel production contracts for the controversial Viper anti-tank weapon after congressionally ordered competitive tests showed a Swedish-made weanon was superior.

For more than two years, Senate and House critics of the costly, problem-plagued Viper have been demanding that the army test it against cheaper, European-made, light anti-tank weapons. Through it all, the service maintained that although the cost of the Viper —a rocket fired from a disposable tube — had grown from $78 to $1,200 a weapon, it was still superior to its competitors. When the tests were completed in July, however, the Viper failed to meet the standards set by the army. An army spokesman said Wednesday that, when current contracts with the builder, General Dynamics, are canceled. $250 million will have been spent over the past 10 years for development and mitial production of the Viper. The army now plans to purchase up to 1,000 rounds of the Swedish AT-4 to carry on design and operational testing to determine if it will be the new standard anti-tank weapon.

On that note, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee on Thursday announced plans to commemorate Friday's midnight windup of fiscal 1983 with an assault on Mr. Reagan and the Republican Party as the biggest spenders of them all.

Representative Tony Coelho California Democrat and chairman of the campaign com-mittee, said the ads would first be aired here and in the home listricts of the two top House Republicans, Robert H. Michel of Illinois and Trent Lott of Mississippi.

Democratic strategists con-tend that Mr. Michel and Mr. Lott are vulnerable to challenges in next year's elections and Mr. Coelho, an aide said, has no reservations about targeting House Republican leaders for defeat.

By Fred Barbash

WASHINGTON - The American Bar Association's Committee on the Judiciary has taken the unusual step of declaring that a Reagan administration nominee to a U.S. appeals court is unqualified for the appointment because of a lack of "personal integrity."

The comince, Sherman E. Unger, general counsel of the Commerce Department, is being considered by the Senate for confirmation to the new U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

In a report submitted to the Sen-ate Judiciary Committee, the committee accused Mr. Unger of a series of ethics violations while in private practice, including "filing false affidavits," engaging in im-proper contacts with judges and parties in cases, and improperly receiving legal fees in a bankruptcy

The report also included a statement that Mr. Unger had been relieved of his job as general counsel in the Department of Housing and Urban Development in the Nixon administration because be was "untrustworthy and allowed his self-interest to interfere with his judgment.

The Andropov Speech

lt is curious that Yuri Andropov, who is 69 and in uncertain health and who has not been seen in public since Angust, stayed silent for four weeks after the South Korean airliner was shot down, and then spoke only in a statement published in his name. Add to that the military's prominence and its clumsiness in commenting on the incident in the interval, plus some unusual civilian potshots at its performance. The impression is one of a leadership that does not have its act together. Harsh, defensive and nationalistic in tone. the Andropov statement on Wednesday ap-peared to mark the political leadership's full and formal embrace of the marshals' flimsy defense of the shooting down of the airliner. It added to a pervasive feeling in America that Soviet-American relations are in a deep freeze and arms control is going nowhere.

Yet there is a sense in which Mr. Andropov, by joining hands with the marshals, may have done what a politician must do to move on. He spoke sharply of Mr. Reagan, who has spoken sharp words of his own. Although malicious attacks on the Soviet Union produce a natural feeling of indignation," he said, "our nerves are strong, and we do not base our policy on emotions." Pronouncing himself free of illusions, he suggested, as would a leader who had had to justify why he intended to keep on dealing with Mr. Reagan, that the president had not yet "crossed the mark before which any sober-minded person would stop." The arms race, he said, "can" be terminated; he then went on to criticize in broad and familiar terms Mr. Reagan's latest proposals at the Euromissile talks, "leaving aside" — pre-sumably, to his negotiators — "the details."

Mr. Andropov warned that the United States is moving into new weapons affecting both strategic stability and the prospects of arms control. It is precisely this perception, of course, that the administration hopes will induce the Kremlin to come to terms. It would be foolish to predict now that agreement will be reached. But it would be a mistake not to recognize that the factors of risk, influence and cost that made the great powers pursue arms control before Sept. 1 apply no less today.

In recognition of the well-weiled possibilities kept open in the Andropov speech, the State Department, in its otherwise stiff response, quietly dropped the previous American insistence on a Soviet apology for the airliner disaster; it continues to seek compensation and cooperation to prevent a recurrence. On the same day, Vice President Bush came through with the long-awaited first American offer to address "somewhere along the line" Soviet concern over the independent British and French nuclear forces.

In brief, it is premature to say that everything was lost when the airliner went down. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Why Don't They Vote?

Almost half of those eligible didn't vote in the 1980 presidential election; a solid majority didn't vote in the 1982 off-year elections. The latest study, conducted by ABC News in cooperation with the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard, finds, as others have, that most non-voters don't think voting makes much difference. They tend to be younger, poorer and more mobile than those who vote regularly, and are less informed and more cynical about the political process.

Turnout was somewhat higher in 1982 than in the previous off-year election — the first such rise in two decades. That may reflect a more positive attitude toward the political process, or it may have happened simply because more members of the baby boom generation have finally set down roots and got around to registering to vote. Nn one is sure. But turnout, as a percentage of those eligible, is still far below the levels of the early 1960s. Can anything he done to increase turnout? State and local governments can make it easier to register, but that is likely to have only marginal effects. Some states allow registration on election day; that seems to have raised turnout, but only slightly. Holding elections on Sunday might actually depress turnout, the ABC-Harvard study suggests. Allowing absentee voting without requiring any special excuse raised turnout in 1982, when the Republicans conducted a heavy absentee voter drive.

The ABC-Harvard study does not provide a conclusive answer to the question of whether turnout is depressed in states where polls are still open when television networks project the result in the presidential race. Some think that happened in 1980, although one factor there was that President Carter conceded the election while polls were open on the West Coast. No one argues that the networks should have refused to air that statement, and it makes no more sense to say that they should be prohibited from airing statistically valid projections.

A better idea is to hold the polls open across the nation during the same 24-hour period; a large majority in the survey react favorably to this proposal. The cost would be, by govern-ment standards, minimal. Unfortunately, it is probably too late to do this for 1984. It takes time to construct election machinery, and it must be done to zero-defect standards; state and local officials need plenty of lead time to hire more election workers and arrange to keep polling places open 24 hours. Congress has the power to act, but it would probably he best for some states to lead the way. No great increase in turnout should be expected, but it would remove the suspicion some have that election results are affected by television coverage.

'Geneva Is a Dead Letter'

Too many hopes are still invested in the dwindling possibility that something supportable may yet emerge from Geneva. But such hope does not really survive a study of the Andropov text. It is more rational, now, to cruise and Pershing deployment in Western Europe will go ahead without prospect of second thought until the American election 13 months hence. That is not simply disappointing. It is dismaying.

It seems that the uncertainties and tensions associated with the transition from Brezhnev to Andropov played a part in Moscow's bun-gling of the Korean airliner incident and the jumpiness that has followed. There may be a problem with political control of the army. Neue Zürcher Zeitung (Zurich).

Yuri Andropov's belated blast at the policies of the Reagan administration suggests that tense days he ahead in East-West relations. In abandoning his position above the polemical fray between Moscow and Washington, Mr. Andropov may have decided to pass up chances for a summit meeting and arms control deal with President Reagan next spring. It now appears extremely unlikely that there will he any deal on limiting mediumrange missiles in Europe before the initial deployment of Pershing-2 and cruise missiles.

- William Beecher in The Boston Globe. Yuri Andropov's icy hlast at the United States comes at a moment when fear of nuclear war already has reached a higher level than at any time since the Cuban missile crisis of 1962. A Cox Newspapers survey of 355 U.S. leaders shows 36 percent ranking issues having to do with war and peace as their number one concern for the 1984 presidential election. A Goal for Lebanon: No Victor, No Vanquished

WASHINGTON -- Just as Leb-anon's 179th cease-fire went into effect, a U.S. Marine officer exclaimed plaintively to a reporter that he couldn't figure out who were the good gays and who were the bad guys. It was a good question. Washington might give it some thought. In all the bizarre debate over how long the marines should be allowed to stay (as if the Syrians would not still be there after 18 months), little attention was paid to what their mission really is.

When the marines actively sup-port the Lebanese army against the Druze, they are now perceived as favoring the Phalangists, interfering in an internal Lebanese conflict and inflicting widespread death and destruction. They may be on the verge of forgetting that in this anarchy there are no good guys or bad guys. In 1958, when the 20,000 U.S. troops who landed at Beirut never engaged in combat and were gone in four months, a skillful American mediator, Robert Murphy, played a decisive role in resolving the conflict in a peculiarly Lebanese way: "no victor, no vanquished."

The partisan Lebanese president,

Camille Chamoun, who had invited in the Americans, found himself gently eased out of office, replaced by a new president and a government in which the former insurgents were strongly represented along with pro-government politicians. Many elements in that conflict 25 years ago are familiar: Moslems and Druze seeking a fairer share of power against the predominant Maronites; external involvement from Syria (then linked with Egypt in By Michael C. Hudson Nasser's United Arab Republic); Western concern over threats to its allies elsewhere in the region (the overthrow of the pro-Western Iraqi monarchy triggered President Eisenhower's intervention in Lebanon); and even the same traditional families (such as the Gemayels and Jumblatts) once again fighting each other, nnly now it is the sons.

But 1958 was a piece of cake com-pared to 1983. U.S. forces did not come ashore after eight years of hloody anarchy. Traditional political leadership on both the govern-ment and the insurgent sides was mainly intact, in the form of bosses who largely controlled their clienteles. Today the political structures are so shredded that radical elements have arisen, well-armed both with weapons and with protest ideologies from Islam to communism. In 1958, the Palestinians were only starting to build a political community that would polarize the Lebanese and erode the authority of the state. And Israel was not then in a position to foment sectarian hatreds among Maronites and Druze. Perhaps most decisively, in 1958

there was a unified, widely respected Lebanese army, whose commander, General Fuad Shihab, knew Lebanon well enough to resist the efforts of Mr. Chamoun to mobilize the army to support his embattled, narrowly based regime, General Shihab knew that to do so would risk splitting the army and plunging the country into even wider civil strife. The Americans were astnte themselves on the state, on private enough to see that he was the only institutions and in geographic re-leader with genuine anthority throughout Lebanon. They supported his bid for the presidency even though Mr. Chamoun was ideologically far more pro-American. General Shihab and his successor were partially successful in modernizing the state, moving toward greater equity in the sectarian distribution of power and promoting a sense of Lebanese patriotism to which all could subscribe; but eventually they, too, were caught up in Leba-non's internal divisions and external problems, and the political system reverted to its precarious, ultimately unstable balance of quasi-sovereign traditional leaderships.

What about today? The situation is infinitely nastier. The main problem is not with the Druze and their numerous allies among the non-Maronite Lebanese, but with the image of the Gemayel government, Like the Chamoun regime a quar-ter century ago, Mr. Gemayel's has taken on the image of favoring a particular faction. It is sad to observe how it has lost much of the considerable legitimacy it enjoyed when it was installed a year ago.

People then believed the young resident's promise to be a president of all the Lebanese. For several months it appeared that he was making progresss in distancing himself from his Phalangist power base, but as 1983 unfolded Lebanese began to doubt whether he could discipline either his party or its militias. Phalangists sought to impose gions where they had not been dominant before. But the most decisive hlow to the legitimacy of his regime was, ironically, self-inflicted: the humiliating agreement with Israel last May. The United States actively insisted that Mr. Gemayel accept the Israeli terms instead of offering him some protection.

him some protection.

In these unhappy circumstances the old principle of "no victor, no vanquished" is the only solution. America can play a decisive role in bringing the factions to the beginnings of reconciliation — but not by taking sides with one of them.

If the threat of U.S. force is used to constrain Druze and Syrian ambitions, then the threat of denial of U.S. support should also he used as a lever to bring the Phalangisis to a more reasonable frame of mind. Every effort should be made to help Mr. Gemayel free himself from Phalangist domination so that he can rebuild his authority as leader of all the Lebanese. To treat the Druze as if they were merely foreigners, or Soviet-Syrian pawns, instead of authentic Lebanese, is not the way to encourage such dialogue. Lebanon desperately needs a new formula for power-sharing that can ultimately transcend sectanianism. And America can do much more than it has done so far to persuade the Syrians and Israelis to restore Lebanon's sovereignty.

WASHINGTON — The real en-emies of Lebanon are the Lebanese. Of all the quarrels on earth, Lebanon's is the one least susceptible to a military solution.

The trouble cannot be blamed on the Russian Revolution. Its origins antedate such other relatively recent events as the Protestant Reformation and the Crusades - although the Maronites like to think of themselves as descendants of the Crusaders, and not Arabs at all. In fact, the Maronites and their combative separatism originated 13 centuries ago in an early East-West conflict, the one that finally split both Christendom and the Roman Empire. When persecution of Christians ended, persecution by Christians began, and when they had wiped out paganism they turned their zeal to quarrels among themselves. Chris-tians managed to split apart on hairs so fine that it is hard today to understand the theological niceties.

For example, was the nature of Christ twofold — Man and God — or one, divine? The Monophysites, who believed on oneness, were hounded as heretics. A kindred view was that while the nature of Christ might be twofold, as the orthodox insisted, He had only one will. Its adherents were called Monothelites. The Maronites were Monothelites.

Such exquisite commdrums were too much for Romans, but Greekspeakers in the Empire took to them with relish. Bloody riots swept the Greek Christians in fraternal frenzy, and in the seventh century the Maronites fled their persecutors and took refuge in the mountains of the Lebanon. An arm's-length union with Rome did not come until the 18th century, but the Maronites retained their separate Syriac hturgy and a married priesthood.

As long as they were secure in their mountain strongholds, they lived happily at war with each other under fendal clan chieftains, as the Gemayels and Franciehs have done down to our own day. In the 18th century that they turned outward and began fends with the Druze.

Lebanon has never suffered from a lack of fratricide. The Moslems are as divided as the Christians into mutually antagonistic sects. Every sect has legitimate grievances and long memories. In Lebanon, everybody seems to hate everybody else. Fending is a national sport:

How do you intervene in this brawl with artiflery fire? Are there any bombs smart enough to distinguish one side from another in the crowded city slums and mountain villages where ancient enemies live virtually side by side? It's like a huge family fight in a bar room where the lights were shot out long ago. The country needs an invasion of psychiatrists in bulletproof vests. It's no place for apple-cheeked marines.

The writer, a veteran Washington correspondent, contributed this comment to The New York Times.

The North-South Dialogue Also Has to Do With Democracy

STRASBOURG — The evolution toward pluralistic parliamentary democracy in the world has been turbulent and slow. In most currently democratic states it was not until the first decade of this century that universal suffrage was introduced. Only 10 years ago some present member states of the Council of Europe were still under dictatorial rule.

The difficulties that Europe has experienced in defending democracy should cause us to take a patient view of the development of democracy in other regions of the world where hundreds of millions of people suffer from severe deprivations.

Nor is democracy a rigid system, achieved once and for all. It is highly dynamic, and when we recommend it to other nations this dynamic essence must be kept in mind

We used to assume that the people of the Third World needed and wanted to develop along the pattern of Europe and North America. In more recent discussions two other approaches have emerged.

The first contends that we must respect the right of others to choose their own path, based on their own social, cultural and political patterns; this presupposes a certain restraint in our attitudes toward their choices of this political and legal systems.

The other approach rejects the argument that tying development aid to human rights issues constitutes an intrusion into the internal affairs of another sovereign state, and holds that it is proper for a government to promote universal respect for funda-mental rights and freedoms.

The Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Enrope has adopted this position: "The principle of non-interferance in the domestic affairs of other states should not apply whenever human rights are at stake."

Since "the aims of development should be survival, the satisfaction of basic human needs and the protection of buman rights," the Assembly urged governments to "make it the primary objective of their coopera-tion and official devlopment aid policies to contribute not only to the satisfaction of basic needs, but also toward progress in the protection of civil and political rights."

The underlying philosophy is that progress of human rights in the Third World, while depending primarily on domestic factors, can be strongly influenced by external factors. But democratic countries have difficulty in defining consistent policies in this regard. Where do we draw the line between unacceptable tolerance and unacceptable interference? Breaking off relations when regime flouts basic human rights is not always the right response. As Claude Cheysson, France's minister for external relations, put it when he was a member of the commission of the European Community:

"Suspension of aid may serve to consolidate the charismatic leader in the eyes of the public. That does not mean we should not denounce violations, but there are probably some forms of threat which we should avoid. [And] there are basic human needs which are so marginally and tenuously satisfied in very poor countries that it is a terrible responsibility to stop helping to meet them."

A distinction should be made between development aid and humanitarian assistance. While aid implies cooperation with the regime in question, humanitarian aid serves to alleviate the plight of the population.

In conditions of severe underdevelopment, no stable climate exists in which progress toward democratic and human rights can be made. Such degrading conditions frequently lead

Glassware Offers Opportunities

A sale conducted Tuesday at Drouot by Christian Grandin with the assistance of the expert Felix curate to characterize the bottle as Marcilhac has again demonstrated that only a few names that ring a bell with the public will bring high technically easier to produce than prices while superior work, carryng less familiar names, will sell for siderably lower prices. on the Paris market.

On Tuesday the object of the test was glass. The first large contingent carried the signature "Daum." Label would be a better word. The beginnings of the firm taken over in 1891 by Antonin Daum (1864-1930) and his brother Auguste, who acted as financial director, were modest enough. Antonin Daum started as an imitator of Galle's work, designing glass in neo-medieval and neo-Renaissance style. Around 1895, he changed his manner in favor of a free naturalistic style. By 1910 Darm found himself running a fairly vast factory. It grew larger still after World War 1. Many designers worked for the firm whose names are almost un-known. Many glassmakers participated in the production. One would be hard put to say precisely who produced even some of the more attractive pieces. Only for a small number of objects, such as a tall pitcher sold for 23,000 francs (about $2,875), can the design be safely attributed to Antonin Daum. lts basic design reproduces an ageold shape found in pewter all over Europe. Naturalistic cherry sprigs run all the way down, echoing his earlier oeo-Renaissance phase. While the leaves and stalks have been etched, creating a cameo effect, the high-relief cherries have been appliquéed. Technically, this is quite an achievement. Daum probably also took a direct part in its manufacture.

Set in Argentina, Dr. Eduardo Plarr (Richard Gere), an up-and-coming physician, is black-mailed by a childbood friend and member of the Paraguayan underground, Leon, into obtaining information about a forthcoming visit by the U.S. ambassador. The plan is to kidnep the ambassador for ransom for Paraguayan political prisoners. The honorary British Coosul is Michael Caine. his mother, for example, having a fair command of six languages. In 1929 he got a job at the Greek Embassy in Moscow, and later a post in the Canadian Embassy, where he worked for 35 years. Collecting works of art was not a proscribed activity in the Soviet Union, especially for foreigners (Costakis kept his Greek nationality). In the early 1930s he assem-bled a considerable collection of silver, porcelain and Dutch Old Master landscapes. One day in 1945, however, he was offered an abstract painting by Olga Rozan-ova, of whom he had not previously heard (she was born in 1886 at Malinki, and had died in the Moscow diphtheria epidemic of 1918).

The canvas was a revelation to Costakis. "I was dazzled by the flaming colors in this unknown work, so onlike anything I had seen before." Out went the silver, the porcelain and the Old Masters, and Costakis began his single-handed quest for more avant-garde works and information about their Russian creators. From 1945 until 1977, when be retired and established himself in Greece, he searched out and bought bundreds of avant-garde works, at the same time compiling historical notes on the artists and their ideas and ideals. When he left Russia he gave a large part of his collection to the Russian state (by all accounts it is held unseen in the stockrooms of the Tretyakov Museum in Moscow). The remainder he brought to Greece, and then loaned to the Sol-

A selection of 269 works from the collection, organized and cataloged by Margit Rowell and Angelica Zander Rudenstine of the Solomon Guggenheim Museum is now to be seen at the Royal Academy of Arts in London. It starts with figurative and Symbolist works by Malevich; proceeds through the Cubo-Klium (1873-1942), Et Lessurgey (1890-1941), Alexander Rod-chenko (1891-1956), Nikolai Suetin with the work of the composer/mu-sical theorist/artist Mikhail Matiu-Foturism of such artists as Lyubov However living in Moscow at this time was a collector who was to revive knowledge above the state of the stat

Work by almost all of the major Soprematists, Architectonicists and Constructivists was sent to the Galerie van Diemen in Berlin for the opening, on Oct. 15, 1922, of "Die Erste Russische Kunstaustellung." Under the title "The First Russian Show: A Commemoration," the Annely Juda Fine Art gallery, which has long researched and exhibited abstract art, has mounted a 108-work exhibition, including loans from the Tate Gallery and foreign private collections, in two parts — the first consisting of a few works shown in the 1922 exhibition and contemporaneous pieces by other Russian exhibitors: the second part an anthology of the work of Western abstractionists --the Germans Ella Bergman-Michel, Kurt Schwitters and Friedrich Vordenberge-Gildewart; the Hungarians Sándor Bortnyik and Liszló Moholy-Nagy; the Austrian Herbert Bayer; the Dutchman Theo van Doesburg; and the Swiss Paul Klee -- who were influenced directly or indirectly by the 1922 Russian exhibition. This commemoration is accompanied by a splendid catalog with introductory essays by the Paris-based art historian Andrei Nakov; Krisztina Passuth of the Museum of Modern Art of the City of Paris; Peter Nisbet, assistant curator designate of the Busch-Reisingen Museum, Harvard University, and Christina Lodder of the University of St. Andrews.

Crisp Colors, Contrite Armani Featured at Spring Shows

As a group, the Italians have covered a lot of ground thanks to their gnts, creativity and promotional sense. So, if they play their cards right, they should not lose any of it. People like Gianni Versace, Gianfranco Ferre, Mandelli, the Missoni clan and the Fendis, whose furs are designed by Karl Lagerfeld, bave established a strong image all over the world, and their designs have become the backbone of many fashionable women's wardrobes.

Claude Montana designs Complice, Gianni Versace is the name behind the Jenny label and Giorgio Armani is the designer for Mario Valentino and Erreuno. The Milan designers may be marking time, but in the interval their spectacular success has been beneficial to the industry as a out of their doldrums and bounced back with what the French do best -creation at its purest with strong fashion directions that are followed

The arrival of the Japanese on the international design scene has also made for more excitement and competition, all of which has been a bonus because the Japanese bring a totally different point of view, a different attitude that has opened new fashion avenues.

The prestigious Milano Collezioni, with 33 major designers, and Modit, more commercial with 220 exhibitors, are made possible by two giant industrial groups, respectively involved in ready-to-wear and knitwear — the "Associazione degli Industriali dell'Abbigliamento" and the "Associazione degli Industriale della Magliera." They advance the funds — about $400,000 — to put the fairs together, then get the money back from the various exhibitors. The Italians' appreciation for promotion is famous. With easily one fashion fair a month, the idea of Italy as a center of design is a recurrent theme. Beppe Modenese, also known as Italian fashion's "premier," is responsible for Modit and Milano Collezioni as well as the fabric fairs -- Ideacomo for silk, Ideabielle for wool, Incontri for home furnishing fabrics and Mipel, the leather fair. Other exhibitions in Milan include: Ante Prima or "fashion previews," Milanovendemoda, the ready-to-wear shows and Milanosposa for bridal merchandise.

Every year, in fashion-conscious Italy, there is even a fair devoted to miforms and work clothes.

Some question the excessive time and money the Italians spend on advertising and promotion. Karl Lagerfeld, for one, who designs both in Italy and France, feels the Italians are due for a new image. "I adore Milano, I love its people," he said, "but I find the Italian designers are in a bit of a rut right now. They must watch out and make an not over-extending themselves to

Family Businesses Strengthen Italian Tradition

They all have diplomas and few of them want to work with their hands any more." As in any craftsman's career there are no short cuts to learn the profession. There are few schools for tailors in Italy, but as in any trade, the best way to learn is to work as an apprentice for several years. "A young tailor must start by sewing," said Caraceni, who learned his trade in his father's aceni, who carries on his father's workshop where he started with the humblest jobs, like sewing on but-Caraceni, like most of Italy's tons and finishing off seams. Except perhaps in casual wear, penetration of the diverse and prestigious ftalian market by U.S. competitors is unlikely to become widespread, according to market observors.

On a limited scale, Norma Kamali, the U.S. designer, appears to be gaining acceptance among merchants and buyers interested in comfortable, moderately priced women's clothes with a distinctive and interesting look.

But the most successful U.S. market entry in ftaly is that of Ralph Lauren. Lauren's range of on" by novelty. According to Lucia menswear, distributed in Italy by Rafaelli, fashion editor of ftalian dynamie Gianni Tositi, is sold by 80 Italian retailers including such top-name shops as: San Carlo in Turin, Belsiana 19 and Eurosport which are "amusing strange and in in Rome and Bardelli in Milan, the vanguard." rather than highwhere another menswear dealer, quality.

Lauren's menswear began selling in ftaly about 18 months ago, and Mr. Tositi, whose marketing strategy has involved choosing spacious, quality shops willing to commit to interested in clothes that have complete rather than "item" orders, said that the impact has been beyond expectations.

In fact, this month, he will show Lauren's Roughwear line of moderately priced women's wear for the first time. According to Mr. Tositi, more than 30 retailers have expressed an interest in buying the ine. Next on the agenda, if the first phase goes well, is to begin production in ftaly-probably in 1985 of at least part of the line. Not all of it, said Mr. Tositi, precisely because of the importance given to the made in the U.S.A. trademark.

There is general agreement by Italians in the trade that to succeed on a large scale a U.S. designer must be prepared to see part of his or her line manufactured in Italy. The alternative to Italian production is poor exchange rates, shipping charges and the added factor of high U.S. production costs, all of which can combine to price designer imports out of the market. This seems to be in part what happened with Calvin Klein, whose made in Hong Kong silk blouses sold in the Milan shop for 900,000 lire, then about $600 - an enormous price even for the wealthy and rich-blooded Milanese signore, or women. That is not the complete story with Klein, however. Italian street and casual fashions long ago fell under the U.S. influence, with jeans, sneakers, running shoes and sweatshirts now the uniform of hordes of young people. But to break into the overflowing Italian fashion market something else is needed.

Beppe Modanese, the top Italian fashion promoter who is the force behind the smooth coordination of the Milan collections, said that he thinks a massive presence by U.S. 'Andrea, was out of business. Own-designers in the Italian market is er Marcello Rubinacci simply exneither possible nor in their best interest. Soundings he made a few years ago, after being contacted hy Oscar de la Renta and Bill Blass as well as the mayor's office in New store manager, cited the high dollar York City, showed that while stalian boutiques would be interested in fashion, they would consider only limited orders, say six or seven items to try to stimulate clients' interest. His advice, he recalled, was that children's wear and casual sportswear were the best bet for American manufacturers looking to export.

"I told them it would be a mistake to concentrate on luxury preta-porter," be said, adding that "as ingenious and talented" as top U.S. designers are, several factors, mostly price and style, make sales in Italy difficult.

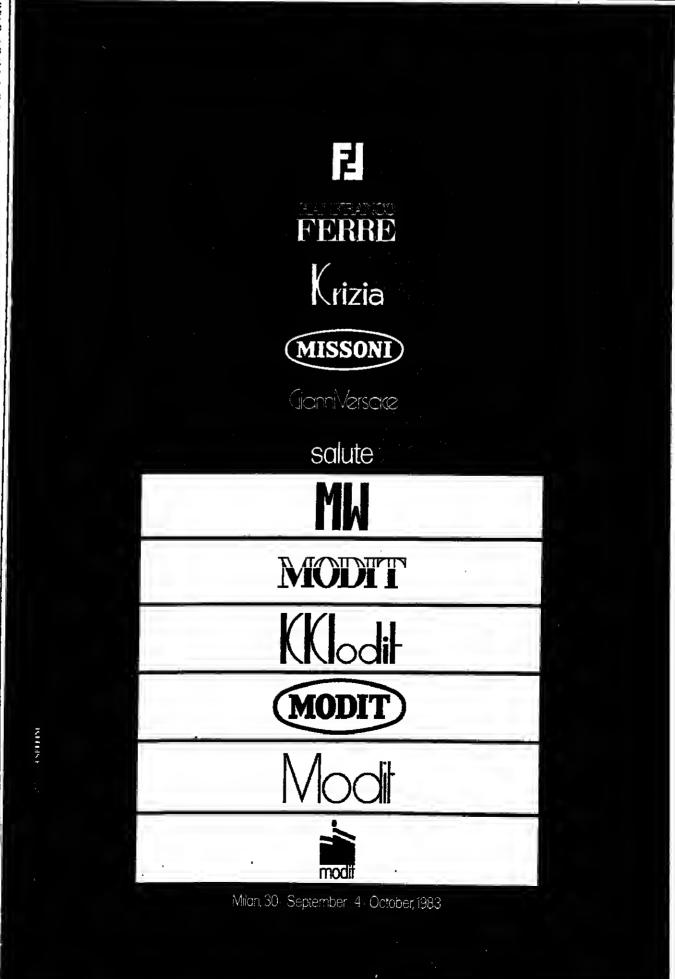

Mr. Modanese and other fashion experts agreed that there is a portion of the market that is open to the United States, that is "turned Vogue, the designers likely to have the most appeal to a fashion-so-phisticated Italian market are those Klein label ran into trouble precisely because, as one Italian fashion writer wrote: "He is the most European of American designers, whereas Italians would be more something distinctively American about them." It is for just this reason that many expect Ralph Lauren's Roughwear line is likely to be far more successful.

The same thing holds for Norma Kamali's signature look built around the casnal sweatshirt theme. Furthermore, Kamali's clothes were bought in small quantities, by some of Italy's most "in" houtiques like Camomilla on Rome's Piazza di Spagna and Cose on Milan's elegant via Spiga. Nuccia Fattori, owner of Cose, said that she became interested in Kamali in 1979. She says the designer's brightly colored sweatshirty skirts, pants and outsized tops are selling well in Milan. "Why not?" she asked. "After all they are 'new,' practical and above

Financial System Must Adapt, Says Kuwaiti Minister

UNITED NATIONS, New York — Kuwait has urged that existing financial institutions be tailored to deal with the changing global economy.

Addressing the UN General Assembly on Thursday, Kuwait's deputy prime minister and foreign minister. Sheikh Sabah al Ahmad al Jaber al Sabah, said the global recession had had a bad effect on petroleum marketing, which in turn made OPEC states unable to accept new financial commitments.

"The increasing cost of development, coupled with the reduction in revenues, has led to the emergence of deficits in the balances of payments" of some members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, along with "a lessening of the ability of some of them to finance," he said.

"Kuwait, therefore, would call not for the introduction of new financial apparatuses but the concentration, instead, on the present apparatuses and amending them in such a way as to enable them to meet the new changes in the world

LONDON — The current account deficit of oil exporting countries widened in the first half of this year to $17 billion, from a deficit of $13 billion in all of 1982, the Bank of England has estimated.

The bank said Thursday that the widening deficit was reflected in a decline in bank deposits and other assets that the oil exporters hold in industrialized countries.

The bank said the mild winter and continued inventory depletion; by consumers expecting new price cuts had led to a $9-billion as counts deficit in the first quarter.

In the second quarter, the deficit was $8 billion, the bank said. An. and to speculative destocking led up an increase in output, following the official price reductions announced in March, the bank said.

The bank's classification of aid exporting countries includes the 13-member Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, together with Bahrain, Brunes and Trind dad and Tobago.

U.S. Says M-1 Rose $2.3 Billion

NEW YORK - The United States' basic money supply jumped $2.3 billion in mid-September, the Federal Reserve Board reported

Friday. increase did not change their forecasts of either stable or falling interest rates in the weeks ahead. In the bond market interest rates remained virtually unchanged after the figures for M-1, a measure of funds readily available for spending, were released in the af-sonally adjusted $517.8 billion in the week ended Sept. 21 from a revised $515.5 billion the previous week, when M-1 fell $3 billion. The previous week's figure originally was reported as $515.4 billion.

The M-1 aggregate, the narrow-est measure of the U.S. money supply, comprises cash and money in checking or similar accounts.

For the latest 13 weeks, M-1 avcraged $515.6 billion, a 9.1 percent seasonally adjusted annual rate of gain from the previous 13 weeks.

The Fed, in its strategy for stimulating economic growth without reviving inflation, has said it would like to see M-1 grow between 5 percent and 9 percent from the sec-ond quarter of 1983 through the rest of this year.
Robert Sinche, chief economist

at Bear, Steams & Co., a New York investment firm, said that despite the slightly higher than expected rise, M-1 remained within the Fed's growth targets for the fifth straight week, standing $2.6 billion below the upper limit.

With money supply growth slowing down amid signs that the pace of economic expansion has cooled off from the surge of last spring, the Fed is in a position to accommodate lower interest rates, Mr.

The Federal Open Market Committee, the Fed's policy-making arm, is to meet next week, and Mr. Sinche said the latest jump in M-1 'dosen't cause any serious problems" going into that session.

AT&T Breakup: Windfall Hopes Overshadow Logistical Problems

By Eric N. Berg New York Times Service

NEW YORK -- The breakup oo Jan. 1 of American Telephone & Telegraph Co. should produce an unprecedented avalanche of stock trading, a financial windfall for the brokers who handle it and the largest printing orders in Wall Street

All this will result from the January 1982 settlement of the Justice Department's antitrust case against AT&T, an accord that will bring about the largest corporate divestiture ever.

With oearly a billion shares and 3.2 million shareholders, AT&T has more investors than any other company on earth. Each must receive information on the breakup, and the vast majority must get shares in the new AT&T and in seven new egional companies that will be broken off. Thus, the transformation of the corporation has become a vast and complicated undertaking: American Bank Note Co. has won the contract to print the certificates for the more than 600 million shares of common stock to be issued by the seven regional companies, which will be formed from the current 22 Bell operating companies. If not the biggest private printing job in history, the order is certainly the largest for stock certificates in American Bank Note's 175 years.

· At the New York Stock Exchange, officials are bracing for the largest one-day issue of shares in the exchange's history. They estimate that initial trading in telephone stock — the new AT&T and the regional companies combined — will add 15 million shares a day to Big Board volume, which ow averages 90 million shares. The increase could last through next year's first quarter.

 Major brokerage firms are preparing for a tidal wave of orders from small investors curious about the new telephone companies. With twothirds of Bell's 3,2 million stockholders holding fewer than 100 shares, brokerage officials estimate that trading of odd lots -orders of fewer than 100 shares - could double, to 70,000, in the first days after the breakup.

 AT&T investors who keep their shares could get each year eight annual reports, 32 dividend checks and 32 quarterly statements.

 Some of the major brokerage houses, including E.F. Hutton, Merrill Lynch and Shearson-American Express have created so-called "Humpty-Dumpty funds," which include the new AT&T and each of the operating companies. Investors can therefore convert their eight separate AT&Tderived stocks into a single investment.

• At AT&T headquarters in New York, 100 financial experts, including representives from each of the operating companies, are rushing to complete the various documents that must be filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission for the breakup. By next year, each AT&T shareholder

U.S. Indicators Fall 0.1%; Drop Is First in a Year

By Pauline Jelinek

WASHINGTON — The government's main gauge of future eco-oomic strength fell 0.1 percent in August, the Commerce Department said Friday. It was the first decline in a year and another sign of future slowing in the economy. The gauge, the Index of Leading Economic Indicators, is a compilation of 12 statistics covering manufacturing, employment, prices and other areas. Since the index is designed to show future economic trends, Friday's report appeared to be a new signal that growth will slacken in coming months.

The Commerce Department also revised July's index to show an 0.8-percent advance instead of the previously reported 0.3-percent gain.
Still, July's showing was much weaker than earlier this year, when gains of 3.1 percent in January, 1.7 percent in February and 2 percent in March foreshadowed the vigorous economic growth in the second quarter of the year.

Reacting to the August decline, Commerce Secretary Malcoim Baldrige said he had "no cause for coocern." A few monthly declines, he said, are a normal part of the transition from the quick upturn that is usually registered in the first stages of a recovery to a steadier rate of growth.

At the White House, the deputy presidential spokesman, Larry M. Speakes, said the report forecasts a path of slow, steady growth and that's the course we want to be on.". Robert A. Gough Jr. of Data Resources Inc., a research firm. agreed, saying, "It's not that much cause for concern at all — as a matter of fact, it's welcome." mists have favored the economic slowdown as further insurance against increases in inflation and nerest rates that could damped the recovery.

But Mr. Gough said there were some "minor warning signals" in the report. He said some components of the Index of Leading Ecocomic Indicators had shown that formation of new business is "still lethargic" and that consumer demand is waning.

Mr. Gough said that the consum er "has been the backbone of the recovery" so far, and that it appears that business firms are not yet capable of "coming in and carying the ball." The creation of new businesses, he said, is a develop-ment that characterizes the maturing of a recovery.

Moreover, Friday's decline was the first since the 0.1-percent drop in August 1982, and was worse than Mr. Baldrige had predicted. He said in August that future months would likely show increases of 0.5 percent to 1 percent.

According to Friday's report, four of the 10 available indicators declined in August, with formation of new businesses coorributing the most to the drop. An increase in average weekly initial claims for unemployment also pulled it down, as did declines in building permits and stock prices.

Components that improved during the month were the length of the workweek, manufacturers' new orders for goods and materials, contracts and orders for plant and equipment, the price of sensitive materials, the money supply and the speed with which vendors deliv-

With Wall Street firms as advisers, the executives are learning everything from how to hold an annual meeting of shareholders to what to serve for lunch at a gathering of securities analysts.

Joblessness Hits 2.8% in Japan

TOKYO — The prime minister's office reported Friday that unemployment in Japan increased in August to a seasonal-ly adjusted 2.8 percent, the highest level since the office began issuing the statistics in 1953.

The previous high was the 2.72 percent recorded in January of this year. The rate was 2.51 percent in July and 2.35 percent in August 1982. The office also reported that the unadjusted consumer price index [ell 0.3 percent in August from the July level. The August index was up 1.2 percent from a year earlier. It was the smallest year-to-year rise since a 0.9-percent increase in September 1959, the office said.

The Bank of Japan reported Friday that the wholesale price index fell 0.2 percent in the second 10 days of September from the first 10 days of the month. The interim September index was down 3.2 percent from a

GENEVA - Talks for a new international sugar agreement adjourned inconclusively here Friday and several delegates said early accord was unlikely.

Spot world sugar prices rose again Friday, to about 9.5 cents a pound, while the futures market weakened slightly in response to factors unrelated to the talks. Although the current agreement does not expire until Dec. 31, 1984, governments had wanted to reach an outline accord this month as a confidence-building gesture for the sugar trade. A new round of negotiations is tentatively scheduled for Feb. 6 through 24 but it may not be held if the conference president, Jorge Zorreguieta of Argentina, is unable to reconcile differences at informal talks next month in London. The European Community remained a major obstacle to agreement. Most delegations were confused about what the EC wanted, and some quoted EC officials as

In spite of the disputes, significant progress was made in Geneva, though mostly on procedures and technicalities. The most significant gain is that all 79 participating countries have agreed upon the conceptual framework within which a new accord should be sought. This framework is a compromise between the demands of the EC — which is not in the current agreement, though it is the non-Communist world's largest exporter - and key members of the

Much of the money that will be nlaced in the new certificates is likely to come from other kinds of bank accounts. The latest changes were ordered in June by the Depository Institutions Deregulation Committee under the Monetary Control Act. Passbook savings accounts retain their ceilings of 5½ percent at com-mercial banks and 5½ percent at thrift institutions, although under the law all savings accounts must be deregulated by 1986.

Under the latest deregulation, penalties for early withdrawals from certificates will also be reduced to one month's interest for the requirement that a minimum offer different maturities, rates, accounts maturing in a year or less balance of $2,500 be maintained methods of compounding interest and three months' interest for acand minimum-deposit require- counts with longer maturities. The previous penalty was three months' respectively.

Most financial institutions have been secretive about the rates, maturities and other terms on certificates that they will offer.

Mr. Heady said, however, that after the initial flurry of promotional efforts, which he believes will be most intense in such highly competitive markets as New York, California and Massachusetts, be expects rates to be three-quarters of a percentage point to a point above the rates paid on money market deposit accounts at the same banks, depending upon the term.

Those money market accounts were introduced last Dec. 14 with change as often as weekly.

The money market accounts have attracted $365.7 billion so far. For the week ended Wednesday, the average interest rate paid by 50 large institutions on these acounts was 8.62 percent, according to a survey by The Bank Rate Monitor. Under Mr. Heady's formula, therefore, many of the interest rates on the newly deregulated certificates are likely to be in the range of 9.37 to 9.62 percent.

Among the banks that have already announced their opening interest rates for six-month accounts, Chase National Bank will pay 10 percent and Citibank will pay 10.5 percent. These rates could change at any time, and the Bank of America in California said that it would set new rates weekly.

tiered pricing that many banks will use, the American Savings and Loan Association of Los Angeles will pay different rates depending on the amount deposited. Thus, on certificates with maturities of 180 to 364 days, its rate will be 10.02 percent on deposits of $2,500 to $19,999, 10.12 percent on deposits of $20,000 to $49,999 and 10.22 percent on deposits of $50,000 to

To encourage depositors to select longer-term accounts, many banks will offer $500 minimum accounts on certificates with terms of more than a year but will insist on minimums of $1,000 to $2,500 on shorter certificates. Other banks are featuring "pick your term" certificates — allowing customers to acquire certificates for any desired period from 32 days to 10 years.

BOOKS

Judith Wilkes, an Australian journalist, has wangled an assignment to go and report on the plight of the boat people in Malaysia. She has been to Malay-sia once before — in 1969, she was asked to cut her eymoon short to cover the riots in Kuala Lumpur. What she experienced then changed her life and the course of her marriage. Now, 10 years later, not exactly sure why she was so compelled to return to Malaysia, here she is, plunged not only into the refugee crisis, but a few personal crises as well.

In Kuala Lumpur, Judith stays, at first, with Ralph and Sancha Hamilton. Sancha is an old school chum and Ralph, conveniently for Judith, is a senior immigration official, a valuable contact for her refugee story. It becomes apparent quickly that all is not well in the Hamilton household. Judith hears Ralph and Sancha quibble over small things - Sancha's driving, a missing hairbrush. She sees Ralph double over with pain from a colitis attack. And later, as Judith watches, Sancha uses a golfing iron to back a cobra to death. Even after the anima is obviously dead, Sancha continues to strike until she is "splattered with blood and yellow-green guts-... like a child's watercolor flung about in a

In the Australian Residence, where Judith stays next, domestic life with the ambassador, Sir Adrian Hobday, and his wife is outwardly more serene, but complicated nonetheless. Lady Hobday is a young and beautiful Vietnamese refugee named Minon. She is alternately kittenish and tigerish, doll-like and dangerous. Minou has a special fascination with the Turtle Beach. She hides her car in the shrubbery and camps there for days at a time, watching the sea. Eventually, Judith learns why: Minou has left her three young sons and her mother behind in Vietnam and she is waiting for theirs to be the next boat on the horizon.

In the course of her stay in Malaysia, Judith gets a firsthand look at a party pot on by modern royalty - designer dresses, warm wine and barefoot waiters. She is taken to a Tamil religious festival and watches, horrified, as the worshipers drive spears into their own skin. She meets, and is powerfully attracted to, a dark, handsome man named Kanan, a professor of philosophy whose life is guided by a set of rules that Judith will never fully understand. What she does understand, finally, is that this trip to Malaysia was based on a need to get away from all of her own rules for a while. In the chaos of this country, Judith finds the courage to make certain decisions that she has been trying to make for the past 10 years.

Blanche d'Alpuget has won several awards for this novel, which was first published in 1981. She is a strong writer with a particularly sharp sense of character. In a few deft behind-the-scene scenes, we get a good look right into the souls of the people in this book. She shows us Minou, for instance, alone in her room, throwing her I Ching coins. When she doesn't like the answers they hold, she cheats and tosses again. And, in another scene, we watch as "stealthily, looking at the oatmeal colour of her skin

"stealthily, looking at the oatmeal colour of her skin against his. Never mind what the Aryans said. Frankly, his color was more beautiful, he thought." There are a lot of characters to keep track of in this book, a lot of small stories to follow but d'Alpuget won't lose many readers along the way. The sheer force of her story is enough to sweep us along to the end. And it's well worth the trip. The final scenes on Turtle Beach are powerful and haunting. Blanche d'Alpuget makes us understand they were inevitable as well. In the end, we know that the drama that has unfolded around her characters was as preordained as the first throws of Minou's I Ching, as unstoppable as those great turtles lumbering across the pale sand at midnight.

Last Sunday, the Raiders sacked Denver quarterbacks seven times in a 22-7 Los Angeles victory. The Raiders are the only NFL club the Redskins have never defeated. The two clubs have met three times with the Raiders winning 34-20 in 1970, 26-23 in 1975 and 24-21 in 1980.

Baltimore (2-2) at Cincinnati (1-3) — With a 22-19 victory over Chicago last week, Baltimore beat a team other than New England for the first time in three years. Cincinnati won its first game, 23-17 over Tampa Bay, but scored only two offensive touchdowns and general-ed only 267 yards of offense. The return of fullback Pete Johnson and defensive end Ross Browner, who had been suspended for drug-related activities, should help the home side. (Bengals by 6 points.)

Houston (0-4) at Pittsburgh (2-2) Houston's defense is ranked last in the league and doesn't figure to improve against Pittsburgh. Not only are the Steelers coming off a rather surprising loss to New England, but they thumped the Oilers two weeks ago, 40-28. (Steelers by

Seattle (2-2) at Cleveland (3-I) - Despite its even record, Seattle has played erratically. In losing to Washington last week by 27-17, the Seahawks gave up too many long passes, including scoring bombs of 64 and 47 yards. ART BUCHWALD

Hate Mail from Tots

WASHINGTON — Almost every time President Reagan gives a speech he makes reference to a letter he received from some student backing him on the particular issue he's trying to push at the moment. It has always made me wonder if the president ever gets mail from kids who don't agree

Well, it turns out he does. Senator Orrin Hatch angrily brought it up in the Senate a few weeks ago. In an emotional speech he revealed the White House averages 100 letters a day from schoolchildren voicing their fears about nuclear war.

Hatch maintained that these Buchwald letters were inspired by teachers who belonged to the National Education Association, and cited a book the NEA had published titled, "Choices: A Unit on Conflict and Nuclear War." The book encourages pupils to write to the presiden and world leaders to express their fears.

The senator from Utah said he was outraged by the anti-president bias in the letters, which he described as "pervasive evidence of political propaganda.

The NEA denied their book was responsible for the anti-nuclear mail because only 3,000 had been sold. (With a title like that I believe them.)

My first reaction to Senator Hatch's speech was that I was happy to learn there were 100 students a day who could still write letters. This shows the country's educational situation is not as had as it has been painted:

Mayan Sculpture Returned The Associated Press

BOSTON - A 1,200-year-old sculpture depicting a Mayan ruler that once adorned a Mayan shrine but more recently decorated a lawn on Martha's Vineyard - where its owner thought it was "a pile of rubble" -- has been turned over to Mexican officials. The sculpture. valued at $200,000 to $300,000 by Mexican consul Enrique Michel, was spotted in 1982 by police working on an unrelated case.

The second was that the letters had somehow been read by top aides in the White House and had gotten under their skins.

But then, I had to come down on the side of Senator Hatch, and here is why. School children do not have the intellectual capacity to express themselves on something as serious as nuclear war. They don't understand it and never will. All they are doing are mouthing the biases of their parents and teachers who have been influenced by the liberal anti-Reagan media.

No child has ever seen a "window of vulnerability" close up, nor does he or she understand the importance of hardened MX missile silos, multi-warheads, first-strike capabilities and all the other little things that go into maintaining a superior deterrent arsenal. All the kids seem to worry about is getting Playing on this gut emotion, teachers tend to point out the negative side of the nuclear arms buildup, and never mention the fallout from the pluses. Is it any wonder President Reagan is getting so much mail from schoolchildren telling him that they are afraid of nuclear war?

Senator Hatch doesn't like it and neither does the White House. Pupils are supposed to write to the president telling him how much they love him, and how much they pray for him, and how happy they are his policies are working to get us out of a recession. Those kind of letters written from the heart are passed all around the White House to make everyone on the staff feel

The ones instigated by pro-freeze teachers have no place on the president's desk. He hears from Congress and from misguided grownup doves all day long. He doesn't want to be told the same thing by a bunch of scared schoolkids.

There is no law you can't write to a president disagreeing with him on what he is doing. But sending pervasive political propaganda to the White House goes beyond the boundaries of good manners. To paraphrase Senator Hatch, "If a student doesn't have anything good to say about the ouclear arms race - he shouldn't say anything at

EW YORK — It is late afternoon, and Ruth Prawer Jhabyala sits exhausted in her small studio apartment on Man-hattan's East Side. The room is sundrenched and bare. There are several chairs, a small bookcase and, by the window, a white desk with a snident's spiral notebook on top of it.

On a good day, Jhabvala fills four pages of the notebook with her newest novel. "I just sit down at 10 in the morning and write until I and slowly it evolves," says the writer, a small, delicate woman with lively brown eyes and wisps of gray in her hair. "I have no idea what's going to happen. It's never easy. I have trouble every single day.'

During the last 30 years, Jhab-vala has quietly produced nine novels, four books of stories and a dozen screenplays. The bulk of her work has dealt with India, where she lived for more than two decades, and public recognition has come slowly.

Her latest novel, "In Search of Love and Beauty," a story of Austrian and German immigrants in New York, was favorably reviewed; as was her new movie, which she adapted from the 1974 novel, "Heat and Dust," which won Britain's prestigious Booker

The film, with Julie Christie and Shashi Kapoor, India's Robert Redford, involves a modern Englishwoman who arrives in India to investigate the scandalous past of her great-aunt, who joined her husband at his Army post in India in 1923 and was drawn into an affair with a charming, reckless local prince.

The lushly produced film marks the full flowering of Jhabvala's collaboration with the producer Ismail Merchant and the director James Ivory, which, during their 21 years together, has produced such films as "The Householder," "Bombay Talkie," "Roseland" and "The Europeans." The team is now filming the Henry James novel, "The Bosto-

By the time her first novel, "Amrita," was published, Jhab-vala had completed her second, "The Nature of Passion." And by the time this funny novel, about a nouveau-riche Indian family, was finished, she had also completed her third book, "Esmond in In-

This novel about a self-deluded Englishman named Esmond, who marries one Indian woman and casually seduces another, set the tone for much of her later work. She points up the pretentions and ardities of two cultures colliding in India, the emptiness of In-dians trying to emulate Western-ers, the social snobberies and follies of upper-class Indians.

After eight years in New Delhi,
Jhabvala visited her mother in London and returned to India, irrevocably changed. "I saw peo-ple eating in London," she says. Everyone had clothes. And everything in me began to curdle about India."

Through the 1960s and early 70s, she grew more depressed by the "heat and dust," her meta-phor for the disease and squalor all around her. "Once you start seeing the poverty, you don't see anything else," she says. "It got tion with the spiritual search in India that inevitably ends in failure, the tensions between social change and crumbling tradition in India and the underlying loneliness and desperation of a casteridden society.

Some criticize her novels' cool aloofness. John Updike, said that Jhabvala's latest novel has "moments and epiphanies, but all somehow displayed behind glass, like beautiful objects that can no longer be handled."

Roger Angell, who has edited Jhabvala's stories for The New Yorker, would disagree. "One of the marvelous things about Ruth's Indian stories and novels is that they seem to have the pace of Indian life," he says. "There's an inexorable quality to them. They're very slow in working out their resolution, but it is totally inescapable."

In 1975, with the support and encouragement of her husband known as "Jhab" - who remained in India, Ruth Jhabvala moved to Manhattan, though she returns to India for three months each year. She leads a solitary life in New York, spending every morning working on her new nov-el, which is set in the United States, Britain and India. "Everyone is so estranged, no one is rooted," she says, "That's what I

One floor beneath her, James lvory and Ismail Merchant share an apartment, and the three often spend weekends at Ivory's sprawling 19th-century home in Claverack, New York. The trio resembles an extended Indian family, sharing spiey meals cooked by Merchant, enjoying private jokes, gossiping, arguing hriefly but fiercely, seeing movies

Her three daughters are scattered: Renana is a union organizer in the city of Ahmedabad and married to an Indian journalist; Ava, an architect, married a British architect and lives in Essex, England, and Firoza is a graduate student; and an instructor a the University of California at Los Her future novels, Jhabvala says, will never focus exclusively on India. In India, Jhabvala's work has been either ignored or criticized. Shortly before she left, one newspaper printed an article with the headline: "Is Jhabvala Anti-India?" She observes: "If you don't say that India is simply paradise on earth, and the extended Hindu family the most perfect way of organizing society, you're anti-Indian. I don't have many
